I read carefully up to page 58, doing all the practice problems, and i checked my answers.p.57- The hydrophilic signaling molecules dissolve through the plasma membrane and bind with a receptor in the cytoplasm. Hydrophilic signaling molecules, those that bind to a receptor on the cell surface, require a second messenger. -- I think in the first statement they meant that hydroPHOBIC molecules pass through the plasma membrane.p.30- A question asks why there is no increase in the product after 100 seconds in an experiment in which an enzyme is combined with its substrate at time 0. They provide a table showing that at the time of 100 and 120 sec, the product in milligrams remains at 0.85 milligrams. Their answer is, There is no increase in the product after 100 seconds because all enzymes are saturated and are already catalysing reactions as fast as they can. The following question asks what would happen if you added only more enzyme after 100 seconds. Their answer, Assuming there is excess substrate that the enzyme does not collide with, an enzyme addition after 100 seconds would increase the reaction rate until the enzyme, again, became saturated. Is Goldberg assuming that if all enzymes are busy working, the amount of product would not change within 10 seconds?p.34- It states Eucariotes-cytoskeleton present and Absent Prokariotes-cytoskeleton. This was initially considered to be true, but in the early 1990s it was discovered that prokaryotes did not have their own cytoskeletons, although they differ from those of eukaryotes. When I first received this book I was very pleased and confident that it would be a solid review for AP. Skimming through, many tables seemed very useful. In fact, I liked all the charts and the apparent level of depth. However, now I can't trust that the things I read are true - even if the errors I noticed might be considered minor. Honestly, I don't know how many other mistakes I could have missed and put in my brain. I'm more sad than angry because I had high hopes for this book. Note: In the introduction, they acknowledge that multiple-choice questions have been re-read in newer water. However, in my opinion, this MC practice book questions do not really reflect the new AP questions. to do so. It could have been 4 stars if the errors were set. It would definitely be a staggering 5-star review book where errors were fixed and questions were styled to reflect the current AP exam. Barron's AP Biology, the 5th edition of the eBook version offers extensive extended review all test subjects, as well as two full exams, hundreds of additional multiple-choice questions and free answers, with explanations of answers, and must have test strategies and tips for the day of the test.
